MUCH LATER AT FORT
CAYUSE....

BUZZARD'S TRAIL

DOC KENWORTH, town doctor of High-dog, put down his glass of milk. The rest of the men around the bar in the Slabside Saloon looked up. Doc was glancing out the window and down the street. And the look on his weather-beaten face was familiar.

"Bud Kitchner!" murmured Keever Todson. "Keep your shirts on," Doc said. "Maybe Jim Blazer's not in town this mornin'!" "He sure is!" Bill Cordon said.

Doc walked away from the bar. "Got to attend to business, boys," he said. "Just how did it start, Doc?" Bill Cordon asked. "I mean, how come two old friends hate each other like Bud and Jim?"

"There were three of them," Doc said. "Three pards. Old Kit Trig, Bud Kitchner and Jim Blazer. Old Kit owned a spread, and when he died he left it to Bud and Jim. Jim was named first and Kit's will said Jim was to get the lion's share, includin' the spread. Bud just got a few thousand. I figger Kit thought Bud was too fast and loose to hold onto more. And he was right. Bud spent his money like water."

"Thunderetion!" Keever exclaimed. "Here comes Jim now, down the other side of the street!"

Doc doubled round the back way to his office, which was just a few steps down the street. He grebbed his medical kit and stepped into the street, already deserted except for Bud and Jim. Peensersby had ducked into doors and alleyways. Doc walked to the middle of the road.

Bud Kitchner, tall and rangy and hard-bitten, with a hawk's look to his face, let his hand drop toward one of his hog-legs.

"Easy, Bud!" Doc called out. He flung back the flap of his long, Prince Albert coat. A tin-star blazed suddenly, for Doc, besides being a medico, was also Deputy Sheriff.

"I'm not aimin' to kill anybody, Doc!" Bud said lazily.

"Not today or any other day!" Jim Blazer said hotly from the other side of the street. The two ex-friends sauntered toward each other, tense. Doc patted one of his hog-legs with a free hand.

"Keep your blood pressure down, boys," Doc said. "You'll live longer."

Jim Blazer turned a sour eye on Doc.

"You leave town for a couple of days and take that tin-star with you, Doc. I'll settle this business once and for all!"

"Well, now, that's just what I'm not doin'!" Doc said. "I'm bound to keep the peace around here, and . . ."

"Stop jawin', Doc!" Bud said. "This is an affair between old pards and none of yours. Pard!" he spat sarcastically and turned to Jim. "Livin' high these days, Jim? Doin' pretty well with the spread?"

"If you hadn't been such a worthless, good-for-nothin' and showed some sense, Kit might have split it even between us!" Jim said.

"But as it is, you've grabbed it for good!" Bud said angrily. His hands twitched toward his guns.

"Uh-huh!" admonished Doc gently.

Bud snorted and passed on. He got on his cayuse which was tethered to a post near the end of the street and rode out of town.

Jim walked on, after telling Doc he had some business at the bank. Then he, too, rode out of town. That was the last anyone saw of him, for at least a week.

Jim Blazer's disappearance had the town buzzing. He'd been expected in town the day after he'd quarrelled with Bud but had failed to show up. When a week had passed, Doc, both in medical and legal capacity rode out to Jim's spread. The house was empty. Just as Doc finished his inspection and decided that the place had been uninhabited for as long as Jim had been missing. Bud Kitchner rode up the trail.

"The boys in town told me Jim disappeared," he said. "Too bad!" Bud laughed, looked round the ranchyard and yawned. "Yeah, too bad. What's the law on my movin' in, Doc. Kit's will said I'd inherit if Jim died. You figger he's dead?"

Doc considered a minute.

"Just because a men's disappeared, don't mean he's dead," Doc said dryly. "At least, not at first!" He looked keenly at Bud. "I guess you can move in, Bud, since you're the legal heir—supposin' Jim's dead." Doc scretched his chin and grinned. "'Course, if Jim shows up alive, he'll boot you out!"

"How about Jim's account at the bank in Highdog?"

"That's a different matter," Doc replied. "The law generally states that you've got to have a corpus delicti to prove death. In other words, you've got to have a corpse. Or, if you haven't got the body, you have to wait seven years before you can inherit the ranch and money."

"Seven years!" Bud exclaimed in dismay.

"If a man stays disappeared seven years, he's legally dead in most states, includin' this one!" Doc said firmly. "But not until seven years are up!" Doc got on his cayuse. "That's how long you'll have to wait, if Jim stays disappeared. So don't sign your name to anything of Jim's, cause it won't be worth a coot's ear." He left Bud and rode off.

When Doc got back to his office, he went into his back room to get some tobacco and light a pipe. He glanced carelessly over the flame of the match through the window, off toward the north horizon. Then something up there caught his eye. He stared for an instant and jumped.

Doc didn't wait, after that. He hurried over to the Slabside Saloon. Bill Cordon and Keever Todson were sitting in front, whittling.

"I've got a hunch about Jim Blazer," Doc said. His two friends went wide-eyed. "And I want you two galoots to come with me out to Glassy Butte."

"What for?" Bill Cordon asked, "Glassy's just a high rock. You'd have to be a horsefly to work up an interest in it. Besides, there's no way up to the top." He paused. Then sighed, "Okay, I'll be a horsefly."

Keever Todson nodded assent. He followed Bill and Doc to their cayuses. Then Doc led the way out to Glassy Butte. He took a round-about-route.

"You tryin' to avoid somebody?" Bill asked, finally.

"That's right," Doc said. "Providin' somebody shows up."

They left their cayuses a couple of thousand feet from the butte, hidden in deep underbrush. At the foot of the butte, they stared up at the shiny, vitrified surface that gave the butte its glassy name. It looked unscalable as it always had. Bill Cordon shook his head, but Doc circled round it. He came back, smiling.

"I always thought you could get to the top of the butte, if you looked hard enough," Doc said. He led the way. There was a small, narrow, jagged cleft, ridged with rough, natural ledges, going up. It was hidden by vines that grew up most of the butte's face.

"What you expect to find up there?" Keever asked Doc, as he struggled up the cleft behind him.

Doc grunted.

They emerged into a typical-butte-top hollow, with gently sloping walls. It was filled with rough stones and shards splintared from the body of the butte itself. Then Doc uttered an exclamation. He pointed.

"Jim Blazer!" Bill Corner said. "He—he's dead!"

"Dead as a doornail!" Doc said, performing his medical duty by his Sheriff's badge. He cupped his ear, held up a hand for silence. "Shhhh. Somebody's climbin' up the cleft."

They got behind a big boulder and watched. A man climbed out of the cleft mouth and went directly over to Jim Blazer's body.

"Reach!" Doc called softly.

Bud Kitchner straightened and whirled. He didn't have time to draw. Doc shot the straps of the holsters clean through. They fell.

After that, Bud didn't resist. He went quietly, after first having helped Keever, Doc and Bill to erect a cairn of stones over Jim Blazer. At the base of the butte, they tied Bud on his cayuse, got their own and rode into town at a leisurely pace.

"Bud killed Jim to get the ranch and money," Doc said as they rode. "No doubt of that. Then he dragged Jim's body up Glassy Butte. He had a good reason. Bud knew murder can't be proved until you find a corpse." He looked at Bud. Bud nodded helplessly.

"But Bud forgot he needed a body to prove death, so the heir, namely Bud, could inherit," Doc continued. "I told him that. So Bud went back to the butte. He planned to drag Jim's body down and leave it lying where it could be found. After all, there wasn't much anybody could do to connect him with the murder. That is, until now, eh, Bud?" Doc asked genially.

"Guess not," Bud said.

"BUT how in tarnation did you figger Jim's body was atop the butte?" Keever asked. "If wa badn't found it, we'd never have spotted Bud coming back to a body only be knew whare to find."

"That was a bunch—but a good one," Doc said. "I was lookin' through my back room window, and I saw two buzzards cirellin' over the butte. It could have been a brother buzzard they were lookin' down at. Or it might have been Jim Blazer. And it was!"

THE END

I Can Make YOU a New Man, Too, In Only 15 Minutes a Day!

CHARLES ATLAS
Holder of title
"The World's Most Perfectly
Developed
Man."

PEOPLE used to laugh at my skinny 97-pound body as I was ashamed to strip for sports or for a swim. Girls made fun of me behind my back. THEN I discovered my body - building system, "Dynamic Tension." It made me such a complete specimen of manhood that I hold the title, "The World's Most Perfectly Developed Man."

What's My Secret?

When you look in the mirror and see a healthy, husky, fellow smiling back at you — then you'll be astonished at how fast "Dynamic Tension" GETS RESULTS! It is the easy, NATURAL method and you can practice in the privacy of your own room — JUST 15 MINUTES EACH DAY. Just watch your scrawny chest and shoulder muscles begin to swell — those spindly arms and legs of yours bulge — and your whole body starts to feel "alive," full of zip and go!

Thousands are becoming husky — my way. I give you no gadgets to fool with. With "Dynamic Tension" you simply utilize the dormant muscle-power in your own body — watch it grow and multiply into real solid LIVE MUSCLE.
